The admirable taste and good judgment of that accomplished property master, Charles Millard, of the Salt Lake Theatre, was especially exemplified in the setting of the altar in the cathedral scene last night. During the entire performance his handiwork was manifested and added much to the success of the display.

Mr. Barton, the stage manager for Mr. Lawrence Barrett, states that the setting of the first scene in the second act of "Francesca" was never accomplished in less time than was done by the efficient stage machinists of the Salt Lake Theatre. The work in the Ontario tunnel is progressing finely, and it is expected the tunnel—over 7,000 feet long—will be completed early in September next. During the past eleven days the work has been driven in 180 feet, which is considered exceptionally fine work. The tunnel is being worked from both ends, one from the mine and the other towards it. Everything is moving along about as usual. The water is not gaining; in fact, it seems rather to be diminishing.

Hon. Wm. Jennings Receives a Communication from the Commission.

The following letter will explain itself:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSION.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, June 13, '83

William Jennings Esq.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit to you the following order of the Commission:

William Jennings appeared before the Commission on Monday, June 11th, 1883, and made the following statement:

"I decided not to register last year, but appeared before the Deputy Registrar of the Third Salt Lake City precinct, on Saturday June 9th, 1883, and took the oath prescribed by Rule 11 of the rules defining the duties of the Registration Officers, and was duly registered. Subsequently I received notice from the Deputy Registrar that my name had been stricken from the list of voters of said precinct by the direction of Thomas C. Bailey, registration officer for Salt Lake County. I entered into a polygamous relation prior to July 1st, 1882, and continued in that relation until about the year 1871, at which date my first wife died, and I have since lived and cohabited with but one wife. I, therefore, claim that I have not entered into any marriage relation in violation of law, and that I am entitled to have my name appear on the list of registered voters of said precinct, and ask that the action of the registration officer for said county be reversed, and my name restored to the list of voters of said precinct."

After due consideration by the Commission it is ordered "that said William Jennings is within the meaning of section 8 of the act of Congress of March 22d, 1882, disqualified as a voter, and is, therefore, not entitled to register or vote."

Last evening Officers Salmon and Smith "worked an act" on an opium joint, and the working terminated successfully. It was in a companion alley to "Rag Alley," one of the avenues leading from Commercial street, and in a large house occupied by heathens. The police quietly ascended the steps and secured an entrance into the room, where three heathens sat consoling themselves with the pipe that is productive of dreams of bliss. No one but heathens was to be seen, but upon searching a white woman was discovered and the whole lot arrested. The proprietor left $100 for the appearance of the parties to-day.

THE NORTH.

A Dissertation on Country Hotels, Etc.

LOGAN, June 11, 1883.

Editors Herald:

Doubtless the HERALD's readers have been treated to a number of descriptions of this valley and this town and that, too, by writers of better descriptive talent than myself. It would, therefore, be presumption for me to force on them a repetition.

There is between all the valleys of Utah, with a few exceptions, a peculiar geographical similarity, all of them being more or less attractive, and the centre of something interesting and useful. There is not a wide difference in their natural features, only when the most southern are compared with those of the far north.

The first time I traveled through Cache Valley, there was a feature that attracted my interest and admiration. So much of what was once an immense field of sagebrush, where the aesthetic sunflower nodded in the wind, and the festive jack-rabbit "dug his hole unceasing," is now a vast farm, upon which 20,000 people find employment, living what to them are the purposes of life, and preparing for that hereafter, in which they believe as firmly as the everlasting hills by which they are surrounded.

But aside from the homes that have been reared, the towns that have been settled, the business and agricultural pursuits that are now carried on, there is a feature of special interest which stands conspicuously out lifting its spires to that God in whose name it has been erected. I refer to that beautiful and remarkable architectural structure—the Logan Temple. No other edifice I have ever seen is a model with which to compare it, either in design or arrangement of any part or the whole of the building. There are other things else that add to its peculiarity. The sacred faith of thousands of sincerely religious souls is attached to it. For its erection, they have given freely of their sustenance, often denying themselves the luxuries of life; and now they are contemplating with joy the day of its completion. And when that day comes, there will be in modern Israel a rejoicing of heart; hymns of praise and prayers of gratitude and words of eloquence will be heard on earth and in heaven. That day will mark an epoch in the history of a people who have set up a standard in the world about which pulsates the life blood of more than 200,000 souls. A people who, in spite of tradition, accepted rules, and made more old by centuries of time, and sacred by the reverence of millions, have established a new religion that has so worked its way to embrace that the eyes of all nations now look on it with an interest in which curiosity forms the lesser part.

Country hotels are necessary nuisances (some of them). The greatest annoyance a traveler in Utah has to put up with is poor hotel accommodations. Outside of Salt Lake City and Ogden, I know of no house that can be called a hotel in the strict sense of the word. There are plenty of places at which people can stop, if the few rooms in them are not already taken by fellow-travelers who are either fortunate or sharp enough to get registered first. Of course, there are many houses that are clean, plain, home-like places where the coarse cow-boy, the refined and sensitive, and every grade of transients find themselves equals in a social point of view. They dine at the same table, lounge in the same parlors (where there are any) and smoke the same cigars, for generally there is but one brand in the house. They sleep in the same beds, often before the sheets are changed, etc., ad infinitum. Most of these country hotels could be made pleasant places at which to stay; quiet, cozy, and retired from the bustle and business routine of city life. Then when the "passing traveler" has occasion to remain over night or longer at them, it would not only be a change but a pleasure.

The fare is generally all that is desired, though in some there is vast room for more and better food. But what is most lacking, and, to me, the greatest cause for complaint, is a businesslike way of conducting the house; a failure on the part of attendants to be attentive, the many little courtesies which are so agreeable and go to add to the comfort of the guests, making them feel that they are being looked after with that consideration due customers.

What I have said of these country hotels is not because of prejudice, but from observation and knowledge after having traveled the entire length of the territory.

THE ELECTIONS.

The Commission Decision on the Approaching Election.

The following is self-explanatory:

SALT LAKE CITY, June 13, 1883.

Alex. Ramsey, Chairman of the Commission.

Sir:—Your committee appointed on May 7th, to examine and report in relation to the offices to be filled at the August election, in 1883, respectfully reports: That there are to be elected members of the Legislative Assembly in all the Legislative districts of the Territory; and also certain county and precinct officers.

As to those officers who should have been elected at the August election in 1882, we find, that by law, some of them are to be elected for a certain number of years; some for a given term "and until their successors are qualified;" and some for a given term "and until their successors are elected and qualified."

In regard to vacancies, and the time and manner of filling them, the local laws are difficult of construction in view of subsequent Congressional legislation. But in deference to the decision of the Supreme Court of Utah, as to vacancies, in the case of Kimball vs. Richards, in 1882, sustaining the appointment of the Governor of Utah, we are of the opinion that all offices which should have been filled at the general election in August 1882, are to be filled at the next general election in August 1883, for the unexpired term.

We are further of the opinion that the offices of Territorial Superintendent of District Schools, Territorial Auditor of Public Accounts, Territorial Treasurer, and commissioners to locate university lands, are, under the Organic Act of the Territory of Utah, to be appointed by the Governor with the assent of the Legislative Council, and that the acts of the Legislative Assembly providing for filling those offices by an election of the people, are in conflict with said Organic act, and are therefore invalid.

Respectfully

A. B. CARLTON,
G. L. GODFREY,
Committee.

The report was adopted, and the following order made:

"That at the general election to be held on Monday, August 6, 1883, there are to be elected members of the Legislative Assembly in the several Legislative districts of the Territory, and also certain county and precinct officers. And that all county and precinct offices which should have been filled at the August election, 1882, are to be filled at the August election, 1883, for the unexpired time."

A Pleasant Day Out.

The children of the Twelfth District School and those of the Twelfth Ward Sunday School, enjoyed a very pleasant time yesterday at Calder's Farm. Between 400 and 500 of the rising generation, with their guardians, indulged in the boat riding, out-door games and dancing, for which that pleasure resort is noted. One of the features of the occasion was the presentation of a new Webster's Dictionary and wire stand, by the pupils, to the principal of the day school, Mr. Van Cott, and a pearl-handled gold pen to Miss Sharp, Mr. Van Cott's assistant, also given by the children of the school. Both presentations were accompanied by brief speeches, which were feelingly responded to by the recipients. The day and the events thereof will be remembered with pleasure by all who went down and participated in the amusements.

Five Applauses.

The HERALD has referred often recently to the scenery being painted by Henry C. Tryon for Mr. Barrett's engagement, that no little interest has been manifested by the public. That all the HERALD promised is already realized in the two performances so far given, is beyond question, and to show how deeply Mr. Tryon's labor is appreciated here, it is but needful to state that his scenes were five times applauded last night, the rise of the curtain in each act being a cue for applause by the audience; but the artist states that it is to-night he will take a little pride in the special work he has done, and referred to last night's as only of indifferent excellence. We shall see what he calls good when that is but indifferent.

FRANCESCA DA RIMINI.

Why it should ever have been questioned that "Francesca da Rimini" would be a success from the first is a matter which we respectfully dedicate to those who, dissembling in their wisdom, make a mockery of human impulses and the choicest instincts of the human soul. It is one of those plays which do not merely emanate from the mind, the brain, the talent of the author; it proceeds from and appeals to those innate qualities in the common family which we do not wear upon our sleeves but carry in our breasts, deeply buried and always occulted until the occasion draws them out. In plain terms, it is a play whose chief characteristics are its exposition of the buried or at least hidden affairs of life which exist at times and in places where the reverse of such conditions appears as the outward seeming. An honest love met by a love fully as honest but not so closely guarded by the sternness acquired by experience and ostracism from the world, at last confronted by the stern fact of deception proceeding from the source which to him was hallowed above all created things and in which, with the crude but pure and undeluded instincts of the soldier, all that was virtuous and holy was enshrined, is a catastrophe such as no ordinary pen can portray as vividly, no common mind depict as graphically, as is done in the tragedy of "Francesca da Rimini."

The yearnings of that love which is at first created by a belief that deformity is overlooked in the glorious qualities of soul contained beneath the imperfections; the gradual awakening to the awful fact that not love but wounded pride is the foundation of his idol's action; the bloody resentment of even an imputation of unfaithfulness so that no one else might hear the scandal; and the tragic retribution forming the consummation of the plot; all are depicted in a manner defying criticism.

As Lanciotto Mr. Barrett has a reputation which he fully maintained yesterday evening. In some of the scenes he was fairly grand, and at no point, place or time mediocre. The audience from the first, by his appearance, his acting and his elocutionary power, were thoroughly impressed with the idea that all the genius of the author found a living embodiment in the genius of the actor. The shrinking from a dishonorable alliance, the ebullition of joy at the belief that there was no dishonor, the welcome of war as a relief from what was afterwards learned to be a bargain, the bloody reception of the messenger of his wife's dishonor, and the ghastly retribution, all were presented with a fidelity to nature and a dramatic power which were truly magnetic and elicited recalls at the end of each act. As the "Jester," Mr. Louis James may be said to have fairly divided the honors of the occasion with Mr. Barrett. He had a difficult part to perform, in presenting the features of a jester with the characteristics of an inbred villain. His scene with Lanciotto, in which he imparts the information of the young wife's infidelity, was a masterpiece and presented such acting as is rarely witnessed in Salt Lake or elsewhere. He fully deserved the recall which the audience gave him at the close of that act. Miss Wainwright, as the passionate girl and the erring wife, was also excellent throughout, her acting in the last scene being particularly fine.

Special mention should be made of Mr. Otis Skinner's performance of Count Paolo, the brother of "Lanciotto," and the accomplice of "Francesca" in her guilty love. He played with good judgment and made a fine appearance. The support, altogether, was very satisfactory, and a better satisfied audience never convened or separated in Salt Lake. The house was crowded almost to suffocation.

Remarkable Escape.

John Kuhn, of Lafayette, Ind., had a very narrow escape from death. This is his own story: "One year ago I was in the last stage of Consumption. Our best physicians gave me up. I finally got so low that our doctor said I could not live twenty-four hours. My friends then purchased a bottle of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, which benefited me. I continued until I took nine bottles. I am now in perfect health having used no other medicine."
